ABSTRACT

This bibliography of 2,414 journal articles provides health professionals and others with quick references on health and related issues of American Indians and Alaska Natives. The citations cover articles published in U.S. and Canadian medical and health-related journals between 1950 and 1988. Five sections deal with major health categories and are divided into further subcategories. The first section, "Social and Cross-Cultural Aspects of Health and Disease," covers traditional health practices; archeology, demography, and anthropology; food, nutrition, and related disorders; pregnancy, family planning, and related problems; health and disease in infancy and childhood; aging (including geriatric programs); and psychology and acculturation. The next section, "Health, Health Education, and Health Care Delivery" includes general aspects of health and disease, health and dental care delivery, Indian Health Service, education and training of health care professionals, alcohol prevention and treatment programs, and education (particularly health education and special education). The "Genetics and Metabolism" section covers metabolism, serology, blood and blood groups, dentition, congenital anomalies, and HLA-antigens. The section on "Infectious Diseases" covers the gastrointestinal tract, parasitic infestations, liver and gallbladder infections, tuberculosis, the genito-urinary tract, respiratory infections, and ear and dental problems. Finally, topics in the last section, "Noninfectious and Chronic Health Problems," concern diabetes, hypertension and heart disease, alcoholism and substance abuse, mental health problems, intentional and unintentional injuries (including suicide), neoplasms, obesity, musculoskeletal diseases and disorders, child abuse and neglect, ophthalmology, and ear diseases and hearing disorders. An author index is included. (SV)

FOREWORD

Additional understanding of life processes is in some ways the most important need of those dedicated to improving the health of American Indians and Alaska Natives. Any tool that makes easier the acquisition of knowledge facilitates the labor required to push back the confining boundaries of ignorance. Since the earliest days of printing, bibliographic material has been indispensable in facilitating the search for knowledge.

The bibliography of Indian mental health by Attneave and Kelso, and of Indian health by Justice in 1980, have provided ready sources of information used by thousands of researchers. The rapid advance of knowledge requires that these venerable bibliographies be updated to collect the reports that have appeared in the decade since these volumes first became available. Not only is new information available about old problems, but new conditions and disorders, previously unknown, have appeared. Adult immunodeficiency syndrome and fetal alcohol syndrome are examples of conditions that were unknown, or not elucidated, at the time the earlier volumes appeared.

The Indian Health Service is pleased to make this volume available to students and researchers. We trust that it will assist those interested in the health of American Indians and Alaska Natives. We wish godspeed to all who join us in the worthwhile goal of raising the health of American Indians and Alaska Natives to the highest possible level. The health of mankind everywhere can never be satisfactorily addressed until this important goal is achieved.

It will be especially helpful for health professionals and researchers studying health and diseases of Native Americans in the United States and Canada.

Format

The Catagorization format was drawn mainly from the Disease Index of the International classification of diseases.

There are 5 chapters dealing with Major health catagories viz:

- A. Social & Cross Cultural Aspects of Health and Disease
- B. Health, Health Education & Health Delivery
- C. Genetics and Metabolism
- D. Infectious Diseases
- E. Non-Infectious/Chronic Diseases

Every major subject is given a subheading, whereas the smaller or less published subjects are grouped together under General or Miscellaneous.

The citations were catagorized primarily on the basis of title alone since articles or abstracts were not always available. Errors of judgement may have occurred in catagorizing some articles. There is also an extensive author index.
